Rev. O. A. Richards, in connection with his discourse at the funeral of David Lindsay, Jr.

Passing along the street,

Let the door be on the latch

It may be when the midnight

Is heavy upon the land.

For it may be through the gloaming

And the black waves lying dumbly

When the moonless night draws close,

And the lights are out in the house,

And the watch is ticking loudly

In the dark room,

Waiting for the dawn

Of the golden sun.

Which draweth nigh ;

The rivers chill.

Over the hill:

In the sky.

For it may be at midnight

It may be at the cock-crow.

When the fire burns low and red,

Still your heart must wake and watch

When the night is dying slowly

And the sea looks calm and holy

When the mists are on the valleys, shading

And my morning star is fading, fading

Behold! I say to you-Watch!

Let the door be on the latch

It may be in the morning.

Over the little lawn;

Along the shore.

About the door :

Forevermore;

In your room,

I will come.

In your home. In the chill before the dawning,

Between the night and morning.

And the dew is glittering sharply

And the birds are singing sweetly

With a long day's work before you

And the neighbors come in to talk a little

But remember that I may be the next

As you work your heart must wacth
